Trance Channeling begins

 Let us continue where we left off last week. Another choice that is possible, when shedding the physical body, is that of a prototype vortex.

With this choice, when you exit the body, you form an energy vortex, and actually hover in between Planet Earth and the spirit realm.

Here, you deliberately choose to remain 'in limbo', and continue to offer Planet Earth aspects in which you excel. Let us explain this with the help of two examples: Nani Palkhiwala (note: he was an eminent Indian lawyer and financial advisor) and Einstein.

Both desired to shed the body but to continue to serve Planet Earth in a different, more expansive manner. The Palkhiwala wanted to offer all those in the political and legal fields, the opportunity to access higher frequencies; and the Einstein naturally wanted to offer Earth enhanced scientific energies.

When a soul forms this kind of a vortex, it sheds irrelevant earthly attributes: quite naturally, both these friends would have had personal, earthly issues and emotions. These would not be a part of the vortex: each would only feed into the prototype, in a concentrated form, that which they wished to offer in service to humanity. This could now be offered at a very high frequency, without the 'contamination' of other, more earthly issues and distractions; as the earthly mind always reduces the purity of the core energy.

Let us take the example of the Einstein. When he shed the body, he chose to create a scientific vortex. This was based upon the combined scientific knowledge of his earthly self and all his other simultaneous incarnations.

As this vortex began to spin, it would draw into self his higher-soul knowledge, as well as appropriate Universal scientific knowledge.

This newly-formed prototype vortex would then be anchored near Planet Earth, offering anyone the opportunity to access higher scientific truths from its vast storehouse of knowledge. This would be equally accessible by a young student studying for an examination, or a world-famous scientist.

Would Einstein have been consciously aware, prior to his death, of what he was going to do?

 To a certain degree. The consciousness is far more fluid than the labeled divisions that you give it. In moments of 'flow', of self-awareness, or in the day-dream state, he would have had a hazy idea of this.

Is this a form of a neural implant?

 Yes, but not all neural implants are this.

When a soul creates a prototype vortex, does he do this 'for eternity' or does he then proceed further? If he does, what happens to this vortex?

 A very good question! A soul creates and inhabits this vortex for as long as he deems it appropriate for self; after which he moves on in his evolutionary process.

However, once a vortex is created, it takes on 'a life of its own'. The Einstein vortex is now self-perpetuating, even though he has 'moved on'. It will always contain his essence at its core, and has added to that the essences of other scientific souls, and newer Universal information.

You could compare this to an institution or a corporation on Earth. The founder member's aims, objectives and core essence always remain the basis upon which the corporation functions; but as time goes by, it is given a new direction by a series of successors.

So another scientific soul, when shedding the body, may choose to inhabit the Einstein vortex at a future point, infusing it with his knowledge and expertise. This can only take place if there is an energetic 'match', and if the new soul fits the vortex's purpose.

A vortex is one of the Universe's most potent formations, as it is ever-renewing and self-generating. It never winds down, it only grows and evolves. It is an example of perpetual motion.

Is this why we continue to honour the founder of an institution or a school, long after that person has passed away?

 You often think that you do this to honour the person, but in actual fact, you are simply re-affirming his energetic essence within self, and within the institution. That essence is vital to the continued growth and evolution of the organization.

Even in a case where the founder has later been deemed cruel, controlling or tyrannical, aspects of his core energy are still necessary. These aspects can, with skillful future management, be converted into self-empowerment, drive and endeavor.

So far, you have understood that a prototype vortex can be created to offer science, or law, or other such technical opportunities to Planet Earth. But an individual can also create one to offer more abstract aspects: such as benevolence, unconditional love, fortitude, courage, innate wisdom, adventure, and the like. You may even imbue it with several aspects of self.

A vortex always acts unconditionally. It is for anyone and everyone who desires to tap into it: you cannot, for example, create from self a 'maverick business vortex', and then decide that it can only be used by ethical businesspeople. It is everyone's divine right to access it, once it has been created.

However, the intensity and magnificence of such a vortex generally attracts only those whom it will benefit in an expanded manner. But bear in mind that if it is necessary for the evolution of an organization to experience collapse through corruption, then its energetic head will most certainly be able to access the energies, freely and fully.

'Choice' can sometimes be so very confusing!

 Indeed, on Earth you do have so many levels of 'choice'. It is one of your greatest learning tools.

Base level choices, for example, are made from greed and imbalance. These very rarely satisfy you; they only further your lack.

At other times, you make slightly elevated choices, but from either the head (logic), or the heart (impulse), without combining the two. These, too, leave you feeling unfulfilled.

Choices are often made due to external stimuli: 'society demands that I do this', 'my parents say I must', 'this is my inescapable duty', and so on. These, too, come from innate victimhood.

Great learning tools, all of them.

A true choice comes from the perfect balance of body, mind and soul: the holy trinity. When you make this kind of choice, your soul sings, and you know that it is perfect for self, no matter what others say.

As you grow, the collective consciousness grows, and these energies loop back and feed you further. Don't you find that you now make more balanced choices, more often than you did, ten years ago?

Now here is a paradox. Though you are all working towards blurring the lines of consciousness, so that you grow and evolve; a degree of separation is still essential to keep you 'on track'.

If, at a higher conscious level, you know that it is appropriate for self to experience death by drowning; it would be very difficult indeed to 'know this' at a conscious level, and to 'walk into the water' on the appropriate day. Your base, human survival instinct would naturally keep you away. That is why you cannot 'know' this consciously.

It takes a very advanced soul, like the Jesus in his incarnated form, to know his outcome, and still follow the path relentlessly.

If we want to rid ourselves of all fear, can we connect with a prototype vortex of courage? Would this work?

 It certainly would, but to a degree. Dear friends, 'fear' is not a dirty word. It is appropriate to shed many of your fears, and not to 'live in fear'; but fear is a great 'alarm clock' in your lives. Without fear, you would leap off cliffs and randomly kill others, without thought of any consequences.

Having said that, it is your quest to rid yourselves of many self-created fears. You do have to challenge them, face them, and move beyond them.

Many people don't understand our terminology of vortexes or orbs; but they worship deities instead. When they worship the goddess Durga, for example, aren't they equally accessing her vortex of strength?

Very much so! And remember, it is not the attribute of the deity, per se, but what you attribute to the deity, with which you connect.

But surely each deity has a specific 'portfolio'?

Every deity has every portfolio. The Christ office, for example, naturally has the energy of love at its core center, but it also contains every other possible attribute that you can imagine, and many that you can't. The Buddhic energies are centered around wisdom, but surely they too contain love?

You just mentioned that everyone is multi-dimensional, so what happens to your DNA when you are multi-dimensional?

(Smiling) As always, you pre-empt our next point! Another choice that you can make, after shedding the physical body, is to move directly into energetic DNA.

In the normal course of death, your energies enter the 'tunnel of light', and then emerge in the spirit realm, where you meet your guides, and loved ones. You are then often placed in a 'healing sleep', which is actually a reintegration of the energies of the incarnated self into the higher soul.

You may, instead, use the tunnel of light as an energetic wormhole, and allow portions of your energy to exit at thousands of points, in differing realms, dimensions and realities. Each aspect then creates new DNA, with your energies at the core.

Let us give you a parallel earthly example: when you inject a grain of sand into several different oysters, each, over time, produces a unique pearl. Each pearl will differ in colour, size and shape; but each is seeded by the same essence... a grain of sand.

The 'grain of sand' is your unique seeded DNA, and the rest of the pearl is Universal energy that has combined with it to form a new entity. Each 'pearl' then takes off on its own journey.

Some of your seeded DNA may evolve and create a new planet; others may evolve into a new species; and yet another aspect could create new Universal light...the options are unlimited.

Now here is a magnificent paradox. To choose this option, at the point of shedding the physical body, you have to be at one of two extremes: you need to be of a very high vibration and extremely adventurous or you need to be completely and totally energetically fragmented!

Either of these two extremes can propel you into the appropriate energetic process necessary for this to occur.

Are you now beginning to see how 'the God is within you'? You are the Gods of new civilizations, planets and species.

If a soul makes this choice, what about his blueprint?

 Each seeded aspect will now create a new, yet fluid, blueprint for self.

Can aspects of this 'scattered', multi-seeded soul then choose to re-unite?

 Most definitely! Some aspects may choose to unite to form a new species. Others may unite to form a planet. Then the planet and the species may choose to unite and 'live together'. Or not. The permutations and combinations are infinite.

But whether or not they physically unite, or even interact with each other, is immaterial. They will always be energetically 'sympathetic' with one another, due to their shared seeding.

Now let us shock you with yet another example. Are you aware that some people, whom you think are living and breathing and walking the earth, are 'not completely there at all'?

You are aware of the phenomenon of a burnt-out star in the sky, which you still 'see', as it takes light years for the light to travel from its prior location to Earth. Yes, some of the stars that you 'see' in the sky have burnt out eons ago.

In the same way, some people, over time, build up too strong a resonance to contain in a single human form. They then energetic sub-divide, much like an amoeba and an energetic part of self continues to live out another existence, often in a parallel aspect of planet Earth. Sometimes this 'simultaneous self' even continues to exist in your dimension of earth, generally in a different location.

This generally takes place in the sleep state, and when you wake up, you wouldn't even know that this has taken place. But you would feel an incredible sense of ease, lightness and relief.

Here, you continue to 'live'; but a part of self has 'died' and 'reincarnated', creating a facsimile of self.

Another, similar, exit choice would be to shed the physical completely, and simultaneously re-incarnate into a parallel aspect of planet Earth.

This technique is more common than you know. Many of you have actually chosen this experience, and then further moved back again.

Let us understand why, with an example. Your current reality is an Earth which has dynamic growth in the areas of technology and industry. Yet you are less evolved in the areas of politics and unity.

A technologically-oriented soul may choose to visit various parallel Earths, sometimes moving into one which is technologically less advanced (so that he can offer his contribution to its growth), and at other times to a much more advanced one (so that he can personally learn and grow).

A politically-oriented soul may do the same, visiting different Earths in which different political systems thrive; so as to explore and experience each form, for his growth and evolution.

We will continue this discussion the following week.
