ENERGY MARKERS

THE CREATION OF THE HIGHER SOUL

THE ENERGETIC DATE-LINE

THE MIRROR IMAGE

EVERYONE IS YOUR CREATION

Greetings!

Today let us speak of a concept which we will term Energy Markers.

These are resonances of the self that you create and energetically anchor in three predominant places: in the Universe, on Earth (assuming that you have incarnated on Earth) and in the core center of Planet Earth (or any other incarnatory destination). These energy markers are records of all that a person has done, experienced and offered to self and others.

Let us explain this more clearly by citing the example of a well-known figure like Mother Theresa. She would have begun, from birth onwards, to place energy markers in the Universe, on planet Earth, and into its very core center; feeding into them her attributes.

Now, as you well know, her predominant attributes were love and compassion; but she also had many others: drive, commitment, passion, focus, single-mindedness, great shrewdness, intelligence, wit, humour, pro-activity, the ability to manipulate people and situations deliberately for a desired outcome, and so on.

All these energies would have begun to emanate from her structure from birth onwards. She would have begun to record them in the data banks of all three markers simultaneously. As she grew, evolved and underwent various life-experiences, her energies would continue to feed these markers. This process would continue even after she shed the physical body, and moved into the spirit realm.

Our examination of this soul has been from a linear, earthly perspective. Now what about all her simultaneous and concurrent incarnations, in different time-lines and dimensions, each undergoing different experiences? They, too, would feed the same Universal Marker, but different incarnatory markers.

In another time-line, for example, Mother Theresa may not have been a compassionate social worker; but instead a brilliant scientist, working towards the upliftment of that particular society in the scientific arena. She would then feed cutting-edge scientific attributes into her Universal marker, as well as into the markers of that particular society.

You are now beginning to see how the Universal marker is a perfect store-house of all incarnated aspects, whereas the planetary and sub-planetary markers store information based on an individuated incarnation.

If you create a mental image of what we have just described, it would look like a central point of great merger, dividing up into individuated strands, each with two sub-points on them. It could further be viewed like a merry-go-round, with its pivotal point at the top, and various aspects within its umbrella canopy.

This ‘Merry-go-around’ begins to spin, not literally, but energetically. All points within it then begin to inter-mingle and merge. The central point is therefore vibrated to an unimaginably high frequency. This central Universal marker then becomes what you term the higher soul.

You are now beginning to see that you create your higher soul; your higher soul has not created you. The various ‘you’s, in differing existences and timelines, each undergoing its own experience, feed the Universal marker, thereby expanding the higher soul.

Your higher soul (or your Universal marker) begins to grow very rapidly. It then starts to merge with the higher souls of others who are also undergoing similar experiences. Through this a magnificent canopy of merged energies is created, which you would call Universal consciousness.

Now do you begin to see how you truly are God? You create the higher soul, you create the Monads, and you further urge these to merge and create pure Universal Consciousness...God.

You are the creator. You are NOT one insignificant speck, in one insignificant incarnation, on one insignificant planet.

Each one of you does this; and each one of you continues to feed into your Universal markers more and more knowledge, wisdom and experience. You are constantly uploading into it the magnificence of your essence.

You do not just feed into it knowledge and wisdom, but sensory experiences as well. For example, living on earth you now know sensorily what it feels like taste chocolate, to experience the pleasures of a dip in the ocean, or the joys of physical touch. These cannot be truly described in words; they need to be experienced to be understood. You therefore also feed into your markers all these sensory experiences that you have garnered over lifetimes and dimensions.

Similarly, what you consider 'errors' are also fed into it, not as 'negative' concepts, but instead as magnificent experiences and learning tools for other aspects of the self. This way, they may tap into these experiences directly, without needing to recreate them in another existence.

Can you please explain this concept more clearly?

No one in this room is a current user of hard drugs. Why? Because, in some other existence you have sensorally experienced what it is to be a drug addict; and now you do not need to recreate that experience in this lifetime. It is already an assimilated part of your structure.

So far, we have spoken of the Universal marker. Let us now examine the other markers that you leave behind in different parts of the Universe, depending on where you have incarnated. Let us use your Earthly incarnation as an example.

As you gain knowledge, wisdom and experience on Earth, you upload it into a marker that is contained in your cellular structure. This marker must serve both you and your external environment.

This is clear when you examine a famous movie star, politician or scientist: each has to work and grow for the self, and also benefit humanity through a film, a governing policy or an invention. But even if you are not world-famous, you have emanations necessary for all those around you: your family and friends, business colleagues and acquaintances.

Now the third marker, that which you implant in the core center of the planet, is the earthly equivalent of the Akashik records that exist in the spirit realm. This is necessary for the evolution of Planet Earth, and for current and future generations.

Again, let us examine this statement through a practical example. A person who has been abused and raped through her childhood leaves this energetic awareness in her planetary marker. This is a record of an earthly experience. Anyone is permitted to tap into it, understand it, and experience it vicariously.

This experience can then be used by another to avert it in that person's life, or its energies may even be used to fuel another to do something about a similar situation. The person may then be urged to stand up to physical abuse, or to start a support group, or to found an institution that helps others who have been physically abused. Another person may benefit from these markers by finding the courage to stand up to an abuser in a law court, or to take other steps to bring him to justice.

Another clear example is that of the energy markers implanted in planet Earth by all those who experienced the horrors of the holocaust. Future generations have used these markers to go beyond racism and torture, and to bring about a level of unification between people. It is the energies of these markers, when tapped into, that brought down the Berlin wall.

Energy markers within the planet's surface ensure that no experience is ever wasted. They act like a repository of information and experiences, carefully filed away for future use by anyone who chooses to access them.

This sounds like the internet!

Yes, it functions in exactly the same way, but is even more comprehensive, as it goes beyond pure information, and also includes emotions and experiences.

Using your internet, you can learn how to make a bomb to kill people, or how to come up with a cure for a certain disease to heal people. The Net is not 'good' or 'bad': it simply offers you information. You choose how to work with this.

Therefore, one person could tap into the energy marker of a rape victim's experience to perpetuate this act, whereas another could tap into it to achieve self-empowerment. The choice lies with you.

Now, let us look at this structure from an even wider perspective. In one existence, you may have placed a rape experience in your earthly marker. But 'you' in another existence, on another planet, may have placed in that marker the energies of self-empowerment.

The various markers, implanted in various incarnatory destinations Universe-wide, also energetically liaise with one another. It is this energy that you tap into, when we urge you to connect with your various simultaneous and concurrent existences. It is this that we refer to, when we say that a part of you is a rapist, and a part of you is a rape victim; part of you is a teacher, and part of you is a student.

The part of that is the murderer has undergone this experience and recorded it in the appropriate energetic marker. And another part of you, in another incarnation, has recorded how it feels to be the victim of a murder.

The two do not 'cancel each other out'; instead they serve and balance one another. They bring the extended 'you' into yin-yang alignment.

We urge you to begin to understand this, dear friends. Today's session is only an introduction to energy markers, and how you create the higher soul. We will build upon this topic in the future, so that you better understand creativity and manifestation.

You have all crossed the energetic date-line. Having done so, you now cannot see yourselves, in this incarnation on Planet Earth, as the be-all and end-all of who you are. Though you have intellectually understood that this existence is only part of the extended self; most have still not fully internalized this and made it an inner certainty.

Now, having crossed the energetic date-line, you cannot just mentally know it; you have to constantly experience it. You also have to get facile with the different parts of the self, in different existences.

Friends, you are familiar with the words “Everyone is a mirror image of the self”. You also know that qualities in others that really bother you are qualities that you have within the self.

Now let us help you see how everyone else is more than just a mirror image of the self.

If you are powerful enough to create your higher soul, it stands to reason that you also create everyone and everything in your life.

Part of your programming is to emit an energy at all times, to draw to the self appropriate people for your growth and evolution, at any given instant of the now. These include family members, close friends, acquaintances and even those with whom you interact only once in your life.

You connect with them, and draw them into your ambit, because they are energetic reflections of who you are in some aspect of your life, in some marker, in some incarnation. If they weren't, you would not meet them.

Even at a meeting like this one, wherein you interact with some, and not with others; you have still created everyone here from your own energy markers. Everyone in your life, from your greatest enemy to your best friend, is a combination of your current earthly energy marker with another marker from another lifetime. This is why no two people view a third in exactly the same way.

I can understand this with people I meet regularly, but what of those I only meet once in a lifetime, for just a few minutes?

He has been created by you, in that particular moment, to give you some subtle acknowledgment of the self. An example: a beggar comes to your car window. She smiles broadly. You give her something, or you don't; she moves away. You never see her again.

You may have created her to teach yourself that a part of you is capable of facing adverse circumstances from the fullness of the self. This perhaps provokes you to review a current situation in which you feel small, poor and ineffective; one in which you perhaps feel overwhelmed. It may then lead you to understand that you have much more internal power than you thought you did, and that you can approach it differently. You suddenly know that you have the power to face any challenge in life with a smile on your face.

But this only comes about when you fully acknowledge that the beggar is not just a reflection of the self; she is the self.

The more you judge another, the more you are denying that aspect in the self. The more you embrace another, the more you are acknowledging the magnificence of the self.

There are cases of people who are extremely reclusive, and rarely interact with other humans... a person who chooses to live in a tiny hut in the middle of a jungle, for example. Such people choose to create the same learning, not through humans, but through animals and nature. They learn through an annoying squirrel, a happy bird, an invasive snake and a tranquil tree, instead of through human interaction.

A part of us is experiencing the worst thing ever and the best thing ever; so does this mean we should not judge the experience, no matter what it is? And, when we get to a stage when we don't need any experience at all, is one where we have merged with the source?

Yes. At an extremely rarified level of the self, you are able to simultaneously embrace every possible experience so fully that it ceases to be an experience.

However, at an earthly level, you undergo many experiences. Embrace them as fully as possible. Do not judge them, but instead understand how and why you have created them, and learn from them. Move through them.

Once you have fully assimilated an experience, you do not need to repeat it, as it becomes a part of you. If an experience keeps repeating itself, use that as an indicator that you have not fully understood or assimilated it.

We leave you in the embrace of the HIGH LORD MITREYA.

Greetings!

A marker on earth is also left in the form of a legacy, implanted in your family, friend, and all those with whom you interact. When you think of a person who has passed over, or are reminded of them in some way, you are simply activating the marker that they have left behind inside you.

Many such markers serve as motivation and inspiration for others: a dynamic movie star, a creative businessman or simply a kind and loving human being inspires others to emulate him, through the markers he leaves behind in others.

At other times, these markers provoke people. A person, for example, who has had a volatile relationship with a deceased parent often feels a strong and unpleasant attachment to him after he has departed.

A marker, in itself, is dormant; but you choose to activate it every time you think of this person with love or anger.

When you think of that person with anger or hatred, the marker is activated very sharply and intensively; whereas when you think of a person with love, the marker is activated in a much more gentle but expansive manner.

Now understand that you keep fueling the hatred, if you continue to activate the marker in this way. It is not the person tormenting you from the spirit realm.

This marker will never vanish: it is a contractual 'swap' that you have made with the person. Each has a marker of the other in him. But how you use the marker is your choice.

This does not mean that you must fake love for a person with whom you have had a volatile relationship. The intensity of the activated marker is simply a prod, urging you to work on the unresolved issue, assimilate it, and move on. You then automatically start activating other aspects of the marker, such as an expansive understanding of why you created that difficult relationship. You then begin to see him with new understanding and less judgment. You eventually begin to see him as another 'you', and not as an external soul.

Blessings from the CHRIST OFFICE.

Greetings!

A final note before we close the session. Use today's information, connect with your own higher soul, and experience it completely differently. Touch new and interesting energetic experiences that you are having in different existences. Discover different marker energies that you may have implanted in different parts of the Universe.

For example, many of you are, in this lifetime, resistant to science and technology. Go into the higher soul and explore magnificent scientific and technological markers that you have implanted in different existences. See who you are there. This HAS to exist.

We do not say that you must bring it into the current incarnation, unless you desire to do so; but at least experience an aspect of the self that is thoroughly excited by and facile with these aspects.

Go ahead! Discover what it feels like to be a brilliant scientist, a magnificent mathematician, a lithe athlete or a creative techno-genius. Experience it, and KNOW it is so.

Blessings, joy, love and light from the ASHTAAR COLLECTIVE.
